11.11.2k17 ... East-West Center students' Piko Listening Journey... Initial heavy rains on this stormy afternoon cleared during our visit. There were many hō'ailona that the storm was on hold. Rains filled the entrance pathway appearing to be a lake reflecting the skies above as they cleared. The storm resumed as we were returning to our vehicles. Just in time, as lightning flashed across the Ewa Moku skies. "Expect the unexpected." Photos na Yukiko Abe

kalana līhu‘e, wahiawā, halemano: Sacred Uplands

Pu‘uhonua Kūkaniloko, kalana līhu‘e, wahiawā, halemano... 36,000 acres upon the central uplands of O‘ahu island demarcated by ka‘ānani‘au within and without to boundaries of the Wai‘anae and Ko‘olau mountain ranges. These cool uplands were home to a flora of ‘iliahi, ‘ōhia, koa, kauila, lama, and fragrant kupukupu ferns and fauna. It is here that our Ali‘i were born, nurtured, and educated to eventually be selected to manage our sacred land, its precious natural resources and our beloved people.

Wahiawā, place everlasting, where hō‘ailona – audible, visual and atmospheric occurrences – recognizes and welcomes the birthright of our Ali‘i of divine lineage. Being the socioeconomic center of our nation, Kūkaniloko – to anchor the cry from within – is symbolic of the piko, the navel, which metaphysically centers and connects us as a people, since time immemorial, time eternal, to all that is seen and unseen...
